Internship Introduction

Introduction

The Capstone Year in Taiwan includes a full-time internship opportunity designed to deepen students' understanding of the local work culture and improve their professional Chinese language fluency. Internships also provide a rich experience to help students develop their careers and professional aspirations. The Taiwan Center's staff will support and advise students during their internships, whether at an organization, institution, or company. Internships take place during the second semester and are to last at least four months. Internships must be conducted within a professional Mandarin-speaking environment to improve professional language skills.

Objectives

The internship portion of the Overseas Flagship program is aimed at providing students the opportunity to utilize their high-level language fluency in a professional setting. By taking part in an internship, students will further increase their professional language abilities as well as gain the cultural understanding needed to be successful in future professional endeavors. In order to foster professional development, while Taiwan Center staff is available to guide students, students are ultimately expected to take the initiative in finding internship opportunities on their own.

During the internship experience, students are expected to achieve several outcomes:

- Students should be able to achieve workplace high-level language proficiency in Mandarin Chinese, ensuring they can work in a professional setting using only Chinese language.
- Students should increase their knowledge of the local culture, giving them a greater understanding of Taiwanese social and behavioral norms, as well as financial, political, and administrative knowledge.
- Students should be able to successfully use their Chinese language and Taiwanese cultural knowledge to work professionally.
- Students should be able to successfully use their higher Chinese language fluency to develop the professional skills that will help them to be successful in their future career aspirations.
- Students should be able to independently adapt to the local culture to successfully confront any challenges faced.

Staff Contact

The Taiwan Center Internship Coordinator is Ms. Chuan-juan Huang. She can be contacted via email at: huangchuanjuan@ntu.edu.tw and her direct phone number is +866-2-3366-4526

Finding an Internship

Role of the Chinese Overseas Flagship in Taiwan

The COF in Taiwan will play a supportive role for students to achieve their academic goals before and during their internships.

The Site Director will play an overall role during the student's internship process, and will particularly work to ensure the students' safety. In addition, the Site Director will be available for any concerns that students may have in regard to academic progress during their internships.

The Internship Coordinator will be the main contact. Before internships begin, the Internship Coordinator will conduct an interview workshop to prepare students for their internships. The Internship Coordinator will also provide support and guidance in revising resumes in the Chinese style, as well as preparing students for interviews by conducting mock-interviews, and informing students about proper dress and behavior. In addition, the Internship Coordinator will be responsible for meeting with students regularly and collecting weekly internship reports. Staff will also play a role in following up with both students and internship providers, as well as conducting site visits.

Expectations of Students

Students are responsible for finding their own internships. However, under the supervision of the Site Director, the Taiwan Center's Internship Coordinator will identify, evaluate, and compile a list of potential internship providers based on students' work interests. Once a student has found an internship opportunity, the internship must be approved by the Internship Coordinator before the student can start.

When looking for an internship, it is expected that students will seek opportunities that line up with their professional aspirations or interests. It is also recommended that internships be located at Taiwanese companies/organizations (rather than, for instance, U.S. companies, which may conduct business in English) to maximize learning goals and local cultural understanding.

During the internship, students will be required to maintain contact and update Center staff regarding their internship process on a regular basis. Students will also be required to write and submit weekly reports to the Internship Coordinator for review.

Resources

When looking for internship opportunities, students are encouraged to take advantage of several resources to assist them in the search.

Students seeking assistance may consult with the Taiwan Center Internship Coordinator to see if they are aware of any opportunities for students to look for. As more students complete internships, a database will be developed that can be used by future students.

Students are also encouraged to look at job forums like linkedin, tw.indeed.com, or <https://www.104.com.tw/area/intern/>. Another site that can provide useful resources are forums on facebook. Besides forums, students are recommended to view company websites to see if there are any internship opportunities or openings.

In addition, the Internship Coordinator will be working in tandem with the National Taiwan University (NTU) Alumni Center, and will reach out to the school's Taipei-based graduates, who work in a variety of different fields and occupations, seeking qualified internship partners and locations.

Language Preparation

Fluency Expectations

During the internship period, students are required to speak Mandarin 85% of the time. In order to be successful in the workplace, students are expected to have a working professional fluency in Mandarin. Working professional fluency is often viewed as a 3 on the Defense Language Placement Test (DLPT), Superior on the Oral Proficiency Interview (OPI), or a 3 on the Interagency Language Roundtable (ILR) scale.

Language Studies

To help prepare students to achieve working proficiency for their internships, students should focus on their language studies during their first semester.

During the internship, students are required to return to the NTU campus each Friday afternoon for a 150 minute class (Chinese for Professional Purposes). During the class they will discuss their internship experiences and performance, as well as receive lessons on office etiquette, language requirements, and communication tips for working with coworkers and higher-ranking colleagues.

Applying for an Internship

CV Format

When writing a CV in Taiwan, it is important to write an English and Chinese version. When writing a CV, there are two formatting styles that are prevalent.

First, many companies will accept a CV that is similar in formatting to CVs used in the U.S. Text font and formatting should be standard and, unless going into a field like the arts, should be kept very professional, clean, and not unusual in terms of formatting. Important information to include is your personal contact information (your contact information will change when you have a Taiwan phone number and address), an objective, your educational experience, and, of course, any work experience. A professional photo may be added in the top right or left corner.

Second, some companies will require a CV that is more in line with traditional Taiwan or Chinese formatting. The content is generally the same as an English CV, but the formatting is very different. Instead of using your own stylistic approach, the traditional Chinese CV is laid out in a uniform way, with blank boxes in which you fill out your basic information (see links to samples on the following page). Information required will be personal information, education, work experience, skills, and a personal statement about your internship aspirations. Other questions may ask for information regarding your hobbies, health, and marital status, etc. Some questions which are illegal to ask in America are perfectly legal in Taiwan.

Ensure that there are no typos and that your experience listed on your CV is relevant to the field in which you are applying for an internship.

Cover Letter

A brief cover letter is important and should be less than one page long. The cover letter should include: your contact information; the title and address of the contact at the internship provider; a brief introduction of yourself; and an explanation of your interest in the company. If possible, be sure to mention a few skills you have that are relevant to the internship. Note that not all companies will require a cover letter. Please find some examples here (all professional fields) and here (hospital internship).

Application

The application process and forms to apply for internships in Taiwan may vary according to the size, field, and internal policies of the company.

After a student finds an internship that they are interested in, it is their own responsibility to apply for that internship position. In general, applying for an internship will require students to send their CV and possibly a cover letter. Some companies may require students to also fill out the company's own application form which might ask for the student's basic information, and former work and education experience.

In terms of the application process, smaller companies may have a more personable and less formal application system, while larger companies may be very formal. For example, students may encounter companies that offer internship postings on their websites and will require students to apply through their online portal. Other companies may require students to send an email with their application materials to a specific employee to review. Other companies may welcome dropping off application materials in-person. Students are encouraged to inquire with their interested companies to see which way is the best way for them to apply.

References

Depending on the size and type of company where students apply to intern, the company may request reference information. If references are required, students should choose professional references if at all possible. In addition, it may be more conducive for students to select references in Taiwan, as opposed to back in the U.S. With that in mind, students are strongly encouraged to develop relationships with faculty or staff at NTU during their first semester that they can use as references if required.

Interview

Scheduling: Students are not allowed to miss academic classwork to interview for internship positions, and thus should schedule interviews to not conflict with classes or other required programming. If such scheduling is not possible, students may request up to three (3) excused absences. Such requests must be made in writing to the Resident Director and the Internship Coordinator at least three (3) days in advance.

Dress Code: In general, when attending an interview for an internship in Taiwan, the dress style is business formal or business casual. There may be a few exceptions -- for instance, if applying for an internship in the fashion industry -- however, you will still want to dress professionally. Avoid wearing flip flops, shorts, t-shirts, or other casual clothing.

Format: Before the interview, students should prepare themselves well, just as they would for an internship in the U.S. Interviews will generally be professional and students will engage in a conversation to help the interviewer determine if the student will be a good fit for their company. The format will usually consist of the interviewer asking questions and the student responding.

Questions that are generally asked may include:

- 請你自我介紹一下。
Can you introduce yourself?
- 你為什麼選擇我們公司？
Why do you want to intern at XX company?
- 請說一下你申請這份工作的動機。
What made you apply to intern here?
- 請談一下你之前的課外活動或實習經歷。
In what activities or internships have you participated in the past?
- 你對我們部門了解多少？
What is your understanding of XX department here?
- 在你看來，你有什麼特質能勝任這份工作？
What qualities do you possess that would make you a good fit for this internship opportunity?
- 你喜歡什麼樣的管理模式？怎麼樣的管理模式才能有效地提高你的工作效率？
What type of management style do you prefer? In the past, what type of management style has resulted in the highest efficiency rate for you?
- 你喜歡什麼樣的團隊工作模式？怎麼樣的團隊工作模式才能有效地提高工作效率？
What type of teamwork do you prefer? Can you give an example that led to high work efficiency?
- 你遇到過哪些挑戰？如何應對這些挑戰？
What are some challenges you've faced in the past? How did you overcome them?
- 請談一談你的一次失敗經歷，如何克服的？
Please share a time when you've failed at something. How did you overcome this?
- 你最大的缺點是什麼？你最大的優點是什麼？
What is your greatest weakness? What is your greatest strength?

- 你離開前一家公司/前一份實習的離職原因是什麼？

Have you been fired or dismissed from a job or internship in the past? If so, why?

Important: During the interview, it is customary in Taiwan to show modesty rather than boasting about experience or skills.

Self-Introduction

During an interview, an employer is very likely to ask students to introduce themselves. Students should prepare these introductions in Chinese to give the employer better insight about them. In most situations and internship interviews, the language should be formal Chinese.

Taiwanese introductions are similar to introductions in the U.S. Students should briefly mention their educational experience (especially their relevant major), where they attend school, as well as any work history. In addition, students should discuss why they would like to intern at that company (meaning that the student should have done some research, and be prepared to talk in an informed way about the company). It may also be common for students to quickly discuss what computer skills they have.

The introduction should be less than two minutes long. Here is an example of how to introduce yourself at a job interview.

Contract

When taking a position at a company in China, it is traditional for employees to sign a contract regarding company policies, hours of work, causes for termination, etc. However, because the Taiwan Center will be making institutional agreements with all internship providers, Flagship students will not have to make independent contractual commitments with their individual providers.

If a student's internship provider asks that a contract be signed, the student should immediately speak with the Taiwan Center Internship Coordinator. Remember, the Internship Director needs to approve the internship before a student can accept a position.

Internship Policies

General Policies

Students are required to send a copy of their English and Chinese resume with their Capstone application. After arriving in Taiwan, students will be able to work with faculty or staff to improve and revise their resumes.

Internship companies must be licensed and registered companies and able to provide documentation if requested.

Language Requirements

During the internship, in order to gain the most out of the internship, students will be required to maintain their Language Pledge and speak in Mandarin a minimum of 85% of the time while at the company.

Internships teaching or revolving around English or another language besides Chinese are strictly prohibited.

If a student realizes that their internship provider has been assigning English-heavy tasks, the student should contact the Internship Coordinator immediately.

Orientation Class

Prior to beginning the internship, the student will take part in an orientation class, taught by the Internship Coordinator, on the requirements and subtleties of interning at a Chinese workplace, including office etiquette, proper dress, language requirements, note taking, how to make a request of a boss, and detailed communication tips, as well as other vital information.

Behavior

While work culture norms may be different than what American students are accustomed to, students are expected to act in a professional manner while conducting their internships at all times. Such behavior includes respecting the superior/employee relationship, showing respect to co-workers, as well as abiding by other policy measures established by the Flagship program.

Health and Safety

Students health and safety are two of the key priorities of the Chinese Overseas Flagship in Taiwan program. During the internship period, Taiwan Center staff should ensure students' health and safety needs are being met at the workplace or by the internship provider. As students will be in various locations around Taipei for their internships, students should always be aware of their general surroundings for safety. If students feel like their health or safety is compromised in any way, students should inform the Internship Coordinator immediately. In such a case, the Internship Coordinator should ensure the student's safety and keep in touch with both Taiwan Office staff and, if deemed necessary, US Office staff.

Absences and Tardiness

The same policies and warnings for absences and tardiness for academic classes apply to internships. Students who are to be absent from internships for any reason must inform their internship provider supervisor and the Taiwan Center Internship Coordinator by email prior to the start of the working day. If a student is to be absent for a second day, the student is to again first contact their supervisor and then inform the Internship Coordinator by phone prior to the start of the second work day. If a student has a medical condition that requires more time off, the student is required to submit medical and other documents deemed necessary to the Internship Coordinator and to their internship provider supervisor.

Vacation and Sick Leave

During the internship, students are not allowed to take or ask for vacation time. All work days are according to local holidays and are not subject to vacation time as observed in the U.S.

In the case of an emergency or special circumstance, students should make arrangements with their internship provider to make up the work. In this situation, students should get permission from the Internship Coordinator in advance, and should further note the occurrence and make-up arrangements in their internship report.

Students are not allowed to ask for sick leave. Any absences as a result of sickness should follow protocol in the above section titled "Absences and Tardiness."

Travel

During the internship period, students are allowed to travel within Taiwan during approved holidays, weekends, and breaks as long as travel plans do not interfere with their internship. Students are not allowed to travel outside the country after the internship has begun, except during long holidays. If a student's travel within Taiwan requires an overnight stay, they must fill out an independent travel form, and submit it to the Taiwan Center Site Director for approval, three (3) days prior to traveling, as per instructions in the Program Handbook.

If a student is asked to travel as part of their internship, the student is also required to fill out and submit a travel form in advance to the Taiwan Center Site Director, as above. When filling out travel forms, students are required to provide detailed information such as hotel name, location, and phone number, mode of transportation, bus or train number, as well as hours of departure and return, and amount of days for travel. Contact information must be included in case of an emergency. If travel plans change after submission, students must inform the Taiwan Center Site Director prior to finalizing new travel plans.

If students want to travel before the internship period begins, they must ensure that the internship timeline will not be jeopardized.

Independent travel, including travel required by an internship provider, may also be cancelled without notice due to unforeseen events such as national emergencies, adverse weather, or other travel warnings.

Working Hours

During the internship, students are required to work full time (40 hours a week, including the 150 minute weekly class time on Friday afternoons) for four months. Working hours should be Monday through Friday and are normally no more than 8 hours per day. (Of course, depending on the type of internship a student procures, it is possible that on some days, the work hours may be longer. For instance, if a student gets an internship at a theater, the student may be required to stay later on days when there is a performance. Good judgement should prevail.)

General work hours are from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. with an hour for lunch. However, depending on the company or field, working hours may differ.

Overtime

A culture of working overtime is more prevalent in Taiwan. Employees may be expected to stay after work hours to ensure all work gets finished. While laws and regulations have been evolving over the years to address the issue, students may often run into situations where their coworkers, supervisors, or even they themselves are asked to work overtime. Regular workers, are normally expected to work overtime if asked.

The COF in Taiwan Internship Coordinator will communicate with the internship providers, asking that they try not to have student interns work overtime or during the weekends. However, there may be rare occasions where working extended hours will be necessary, and this will be permissible if agreed upon in advance. If such a case were to occur, the student should arrange with their internship provider supervisor a reduced work schedule for the following week, to balance the extra hours the intern worked during the overtime.

Location

Internships must be located within close enough distance in order to attend the Friday afternoon weekly class held at NTU.

Payment or Compensation

As per local regulations, as well as The Language Flagship policy, students are not to be paid for their internships. Students are also not to accept any compensation or benefits in relation to their internships.

Any student who is in violation of any The Language Flagship policies regarding compensation is liable at their own risk; further, such a violation can lead to termination from the Capstone program.

Internship Work Culture

Workplace Language and Culture

Workplace language and culture will vary between different companies and internship providers within Taiwan. Some companies may be more formal, while other companies may be more relaxed. Students are encouraged to ask their internship providers what type of workplace culture prevails at the company during their interviews.

In general, students may notice that workplace culture in Taiwan is often focused on teamwork. Superiors might ask students to often work with others to accomplish projects. However, some internship providers may also require students to work independently to finish assigned projects.

In addition, students will most likely notice that work language is more mild mannered than in the U.S. Co-workers and superiors will seldom be direct in their approach with criticism or when giving opinions. Instead, there may be hidden intent that is not expressed but that will still need to be followed. For example, after reading a report, a boss might comment that the content is not written in the same way as it would normally be written in Taiwan. While this may sound like a general comment, the boss is most likely indicating that the student should redo the report in the Taiwanese style.

While co-workers may invite other co-workers out to lunch or occasionally to dinner after work, it is not compulsory but rather a way to build friendship and teamwork. Students might also be asked by their bosses to have a team lunch as opposed to a team dinner.

Students should also ask their internship providers about procedures for arriving and leaving each day. At many locations, workers are required to clock-in and clock-out with a punch card. This may or may not be true for interns, so be sure to ask.

While every workplace will be different, students should observe the local work culture by paying attention to how their co-workers interact with one another.

To review Chinese for office communication, please read examples below:

1. answer the phone; take a call
2. take a leave/day off; get off work; work overtime; work shifts; business trip
3. office communication for general purposes

Confidentiality

COF in Taiwan staff take student confidentiality very seriously. COF in Taiwan staff will take all measures possible to ensure student confidentiality is met.

With that being said, during the internship period, students may notice that Taiwanese confidentiality standards differ than those in the U.S. While supervisors and co-workers may also honor confidentiality, it is not a guarantee. Therefore, students should choose carefully which information they share with supervisors and co-workers. It is best for students to avoid discussing topics that are too personal, or anything about their personal life that could cause them worry, discomfort, or embarrassment if revealed to the general public.

Chinese Titles

It is customary to use titles when addressing individuals in the workplace, especially superiors. If failing to address a superior by the proper title, and by name only, it may seem impolite and/or disrespectful.

For example, when referring to a boss, you would seldom refer to them solely as their name, but rather 老闆, 總經理, 副總經理, 經理, or 組長.

In other instances, you may refer to them as the last name followed by their job title, for example 王總, 吳副理, 張經理, 陳組長.

If ever in doubt, students should ask their superiors how they should be addressed in the workplace. Students can also listen to how other co-workers interact with their superiors to understand what titles they should use.

Please click the bilingual glossary shared by MBAlib.com for more Chinese titles.

Gender in the Workplace

Taiwan has gone to great efforts to address gender in the workforce with the Act of Gender Equality in Employment. As such, Taiwan has sought to create equal opportunities for everyone regardless of gender. This is not only represented in the workplace, where women are increasingly elevated to leadership roles, but also in the government, where there are many women serving in the legislature and currently Taiwan has its first female president.

While Taiwan is conscious of gender balance, traditional gender norms may still exist in a student's workplace. Some supervisors or coworkers may still have a concept that one gender is more dominant in the workplace than the other, or that the work assigned to genders should be different.

Status Hierarchy

Status hierarchy is seen as an integral part of the workplace. Students should be aware that superiors are expected to be treated with respect.

In addition, communication should always go through the line of command unless stated otherwise. For example, it would be inappropriate for a student to bring up a request with his supervisor's superior. Instead, the student should bring up the request with his immediate supervisor.

Another aspect of hierarchy revolves around the concept of face or mianzi 面子. In public settings, or even when in work meetings, employees must show respect to their bosses. This will also entail employees not disagreeing with their bosses' ideas, especially in public forums or in front of clients. The boss must be seen as always right.

Social Etiquette

Social etiquette in Taiwan will most likely differ than what American students are accustomed to. While etiquette details or norms may seem insignificant, they can make a large impact on the daily work culture, as well as the success of the student at their internship.

For example, related to status hierarchy, it is customary for employees to acknowledge when their bosses or supervisors arrive or enter a room for the first time by stating "(title)好". At the same time, it is customary for employees to say goodbye as their supervisors leave for the day.

Other etiquette revolves around maintaining positive relations with co-workers. For example, while it may not be necessary to inform people you are leaving for the day when your work is finished, it is still polite to tell your co-workers near you that you are leaving for the day. At the same time, if going out for lunch, it is polite to ask co-workers if they would like you to pick up an item like a drink or food for them. If they say yes, they will usually offer you money to cover the cost, but you can "treat" them if you feel comfortable doing so.

In terms of business norms, there are several similarities to Western culture. For example, students are not expected to bow but rather to shake hands. Other physical contact -- like hugs -- are often avoided, especially when involving superiors. In addition, it is customary to give and receive business cards after introducing oneself. Please note that it is important to give and receive business cards with two hands. When receiving a business card, students should first look at the business card for a few moments. Students can also make a remark, like, "Oh, okay, I see you are the manager," or "Your name is this character," etc., to show that you are paying respectful attention to the person. Students should refrain from putting business cards in their back pockets, as this is perceived as an insult, indicating that the business card is not valued. Instead, to show respect and politeness, once a business card has been accepted, it should be put in your wallet or bag.

Lastly, there is specific social etiquette around refusing an invitation. If a student is in a social situation and is invited to eat dinner or is offered a ride home, the student should politely refuse at first. If the individual continues to offer, the student can choose to accept the invitation. However, if the student really does not want to accept the invitation, students are encouraged to refuse in a polite manner. For example, a student can respond with “我今天比較忙，下次有時間再一起出去”. Or if a co-worker has offered to buy alcohol to drink, you can refuse by saying you are allergic “我對酒精過敏，所以我不能喝酒”, that you don't drink, or that even though you are abroad, as a member of a study abroad program you are required to abide by U.S. law, which does not permit anyone under the age of 21 to drink alcohol.

As with hierarchy status, it is recommended that students pay close attention to other social etiquette behavior by friends, colleagues, and others around them.

Dealing with Harassment

If a student is in a situation where they feel they are being harassed, whether emotionally, verbally, or sexually, the student should inform COF in Taiwan staff immediately. The student should also seek to remove himself or herself from the situation if possible. If a student brings such concerns to Taiwan Center staff, the staff will work with the US Office staff to ensure student safety and provide resources and support.

Further, if a student is sexually harassed at the workplace, the incident should be immediately reported to the Taiwan Center Resident Director. The Resident Director must report the incident to the Site Director, who will in turn report to the US Office Project Director. If the student is a Hunter College student, the Project Director must report the incident to the Hunter College, CUNY Title IX Coordinator. If the student attends one of the other Chinese Flagship universities, then the Project Director must report the incident to the student's home university Title IX Coordinator. IIE/NSEP will also be made aware of the incident, in a report that keeps the student's confidentiality. Beyond this required chain of notification, it is up to the student as to who else may be informed (parents, their home university program director, etc.).

If the situation is such that the workplace sexual harassment has moved to a level of emergency (student requires hospitalization), the Taiwan Center staff must refer to the Risk Management Guidebook and follow protocol as outlined there.

Writing an Official Document

When writing an official document, students should always use formal written language (書面語). Vernacular oral grammar should be avoided.

If a student is asked to write an official document, the student should always check with their internship provider regarding different styles or protocols that are in place. If a workplace uses specific formatting, the intern should follow those requirements.

There are different types of official documents used in Taiwan: 「令」 (Order)、 「呈」 (used when petitioning or reporting to the President.)、 「咨」 (used between the President and the Legislative Yuan)、 「函」 (Letter)、 「公告」 (Announcement)、 「其他公文」 (others)六種。 To learn more, please read definitions in Chinese, official document language and examples of government official document.

It is common for official workplace documents to include the title or project name on the document, as well as who wrote the report and the date.

When submitting a document for review, students should use proper etiquette like asking their boss to "請您看一下 (colloquial); 請您過目 (formal); 請您修改 (neutral); 請您指正 (formal)".

Chinese for Professional Purposes

During their internships, each Friday afternoon the students will be required to return to the NTU campus to attend a mandatory 150minute weekly class, Chinese for Professional Purposes, to discuss their internship experience. Topics may include how to take notes at the workplace, how to use Chinese in a meeting, the social etiquette of the workplace, how to make requests to your boss, and other important aspects of professional interaction at a Chinese workplace.

Student Reports

Students will also be required to complete and hand in an internship report at the end of each week. More information will be provided before the semester-long internship begins. A weekly report template will be provided to students prior to the internship process.

Internship Evaluation and Grades

Evaluation Guidelines

Students are expected to treat their internship as they would a job. This means arriving at the internship on time each day, in the correct attire, prepared to fully participate and engage in the workplace. Each student's internship provider supervisor will write a report at the end of the internship, addressing how well the student met expectations, how well the student fulfilled the tasks that were assigned to them, and their overall impressions of the student's behavior, professionalism, and workplace performance. A similar report will be written by the Taiwan Center's Internship Coordinator, who will make two site visits to each student's internship provider in order to observe the student at work. These two reports make up 60% of a student's final grade for the In-Service Internship course.

Another important aspect of evaluation is self-evaluation. Students are required to submit weekly written reports to the Internship Coordinator on their internship tasks, as well as reflections on their own workplace performance. Students are expected to be self-aware, and note areas in which they need improvement. These student reports make up 25% of a student's final grade for the In-Service Internship course.

The final 15% of the student's final grade for the In-Service Internship course is based on the student's consistent contribution to their internship provider, timely completion of tasks in the workplace and submission of reports/reflections to the Internship Coordinator, attention to workplace culture, and general engagement in, and accountability to, their internship assignment.

Grades

As outlined above, this course is assessed on an on-going (formative), as well as summative, basis, with all components tallying to a maximum of 100 points per student.

Provided that a student is dedicated to their overall internship performance, and is focused simultaneously on increasing all aspects of professional Chinese language usage and absorbing Chinese professional workplace culture, the student should be able to achieve a high grade in the In-Service Internship course.

Disciplinary Policy

Acknowledgment

Students are required to follow all of the workplace rules that are in place at their internship provider, and to behave in a way that reflects well on themselves, the COF in Taiwan, Hunter College, CUNY, their home universities, IIE/NSEP, and the United States. In other words, students are to act in a thoroughly professional manner the entire time they are at their place of work. This means not only following workplace rules, but also: dressing professionally; arriving to work on time; not departing early; being courteous and polite with colleagues and supervisors; not making personal calls; and of course, performing all required workplace tasks in a timely way and to the best of one's ability.

The COF in Taiwan Program knows that the internship will be a challenging part of the year abroad. The Program is aware that working in a foreign country with different workplace norms and culture may mean that there may be times when a student makes a mistake. But the expectation is that Taiwan Program students will be responsible, and will admit to and own the mistake, and learn from the experience. Typos happen, missent emails happen, the occasional lateness to work happens.

However, should a student make continuous mistakes without learning from them, or in any other way perform so poorly at their internship that their internship supervisor feels the need to contact the Taiwan Center Internship Coordinator about the student's performance, there is a system in place to address this. Please see below.

Violation System and Dismissal

The first time an internship provider supervisor contacts the Internship Coordinator regarding a student's poor performance, the student will be asked to come in and speak with the Internship Coordinator. Together they will try to solve the issues that are causing the supervisor to be dissatisfied with the student's performance.

If the student's performance does not improve, and the supervisor again contacts the Internship Coordinator, a meeting will be arranged with the student and the supervisor. The Internship Coordinator will act as a mediator to improve the student's work performance, and to make sure there is agreement between what the supervisor requires and the student's ability to do the tasks. At this time, a written warning will be sent to the student, and the US Office will be notified, as will the student's home institution.

If a supervisor feels the need to contact the Internship Coordinator a third time, it is likely that the student will be removed from the internship. Depending on the circumstances (perhaps the internship was just a terrible fit), and the timing, the Internship Coordinator may seek to help the student find a different internship for the remainder of the internship period. Please note that there is no guarantee that such a change will be possible (unless there is a danger to the student's safety). However, if the circumstances of the continuing internship issues are due to the student's behavior, poor work habits, etc., the student will be dismissed from the Taiwan Program and sent home at their own expense.

One other note: While it may be possible for a student to be placed in an alternate internship given the type of situation outlined above, in general changing internships is not recommended, nor possible. If a student has a minor issue with their internship provider, it is recommended that they face the problem and work to solve it, as a professional person would.

Tips for a Successful Internship

While students' experiences will greatly vary, there are several tips that will make the internship more successful. Note that there are many other things beyond the tips below that will help a student have a successful internship experience:

- Look for an internship that is closely associated with professional aspirations or interests
- Look for an internship provider that has a work atmosphere which matches your personality or work style
- Look for an internship that can utilize language that you already have mastered, but can also challenge you to continue to develop your language skills
- Make it clear to prospective employers that you are looking for an internship that allows you to speak Mandarin essentially at all times
- Apply for multiple internship opportunities in case your first choices do not work out
- Clarify your and your employer's goals and expectations from the beginning
- When first starting out, ask questions to learn as much as possible about the company, daily work, and work norms
- Focus on your language skill. Make sure you proofread all documents and communicate clearly to get your points across
- Be punctual each day. If late or sick, remember to inform your supervisor as well as Taiwan Center staff
- Dress professionally (unless the work culture at your individual provider is more business casual)
- Behave professionally
- Stay organized and manage time wisely
- Try to establish friendly relations with your coworkers
- Be approachable to your coworkers; while you are learning about Taiwanese culture, you are also an ambassador of American culture
- Keep any information that is private to yourself; work gossip may be more prevalent than is typical in the U.S.
- Throw out any preconceived notions of the local culture you may have and instead absorb and adapt to how the culture actually is as you experience it
- Be flexible and open minded during the search and internship process
